TERRIFYING TV

HORROR AT THE CECIL HOTEL

In the 1920s, L.A.'s Cecil Hotel was a glamorous art deco destination. But that was short-lived as, after the Great Depression hit, it turned into a seedy, low-budget hotel with a salacious guest book and notorious dark past that included murders, suicides and serial killers. The sinister happenings at the hotel actually served as the inspiration behind American Horror Story: Hotel. Investigation Discovery's three-part docuseries Horror at the Cecil Hotel (beginning Oct. 16) follows some of the creepiest unexplained stories that occurred there. One of the cases is that of Elisa Lam, who disappeared on Jan. 31, 2013, and was later found dead in the hotel's rooftop water tank. The series features actual video surveillance that shows Lam bizarrely hiding in the elevator and talking mysteriously with her hands to what could be an evil presence. Additional episodes explore whether there is an underlying evil that connects the grisly events that plagued this hotel.

Why Was A Small Town In Ohio Evacuated In 1974?

Destination America's two-hour special Helltown revisits a real-life event that has spawned decades of questions and conspiracy theories. In 1974 the town of Boston, Ohio, which is located in the northern part of Summit County, was abruptly evacuated by the government and pretty much erased off the map. Homes and businesses were eerily abandoned, and signs posted warned that the land was "closed to public use and travel because of emergency conditions." Helltown (Oct. 29) will investigate the real story.

You'll Never Stay Home Alone Again

You know how you keep your blinds open at night thinking no one can really see you? You think because it's a small town, you don't need to lock your doors? Yeah, you are going to rethink that one. Investigation Discovery's new series Home Alone (Thursdays beginning Oct. 12) shares horrifying true stories about late-night break-ins, stalkers and home invasions that will leave you jumping at any little noise in your house.

Stay Out Of Those Woods

Although fictional, 1999's horror/mystery The Blair Witch Project left us permanently scarred and forever afraid of venturing into the woods at night. Destination America capitalizes on that innate fear in the new series Terror in the Woods (Tuesdays beginning Oct. 10). The series shares real-life stories from people who went into the woods, only to be scared out by ghosts, monsters and other unexplained phenomena.

TRICK OR TREAT?

Michael Jackson In An Animated Thriller.

By Lori Acken

Move over, Great Pumpkin. The late King of Pop is moonwalking into a brand-new, animated Halloween special, Michael Jackson's Halloween, voiced by past and present CBS stars. Created by Optimum Productions, which is owned by Jackson's estate, the hourlong animated feature follows Vincent (Lucas Till, MacGyver) and Victoria (Kiersey Clemons, Extant), who meet cute on Halloween night and, along with their furry friend Ichabod, wind up at This Place Hotel (named after Jackson's rechristened 1980 tune), located at 777 Jackson St. — an homage to the Gary, Ind., road on which Joe and Katherine Jackson raised their famous brood. Inside the spooky spot, Vincent and Victoria embark on “an unexpected, magical adventure of personal discovery, culminating in a spectacular dance finale featuring an animated Michael Jackson.” With Jackson's music as its soundtrack, along with the voices of Christine Baranski, Alan Cumming, George Eads, Brad Garrett, Lucy Liu and Jim Parsons, Michael Jackson's Halloween is a treat.

The WATCHER IN THE WOODS

Melissa Joan Hart Puts A Modern Spin On The Vintage Disney Thriller.

By Lori Acken

Melissa Joan Hart and her business partner/mom Paula spent years trying to score rights to the 1980 thriller The Watcher in the Woods, Disney Studios' first foray into the horror genre, and an obsession for Melissa and her siblings when they were kids. The PG-rated spectacle told the tale of Mrs. Aylwood, whose little daughter Karen vanished decades before under ominous circumstances. When teenage Jan and her family rent Aylwood manor for the summer, she and her little sister Ellie become dangerously entangled in the mystery.

“By the time we got the rights, I was too old to play Jan and too young to play Mrs. Aylwood,” Hart laughs. “So, I wanted to direct it.” Hart and screenwriter Scott Abbott opted to refresh the tale for a new generation, holding on to “three very special moments from the original movie,” she says. “I went back and watched it, just to make sure I didn't miss anything that was iconic. Those moments are there for fans that loved it as children (Neraki!) — but it's a very updated version. We really made it our own.”

Hart relished having Oscar winner Anjelica Huston as her Mrs. Aylwood — a role originated by Bette Davis. “Most of the time I was just thinking, ‘She knows more than I do!’” Hart smiles. “Her father was a director, she's directed — just knowing that it's Anjelica Huston, you just let her be Anjelica Huston.”

On The Eve Of The 100th Episode, Scott Gimple Talks War And Peace.

By Lori Acken

As the zombie hit heads into its Season 8 premiere, which is also its 100th episode, The Walking Dead writer/executive producer Scott Gimple reflects, “The seven years I’ve been involved in it feel like just one breakneck season we’ve been working on the whole time. I look at this episode as the beginning of the next hundred episodes, which – and I don’t mean to make such a brash and audacious statement – but story-wise, it does still feel like the beginning. [Dead creator] Robert Kirkman has certainly laid out a fascinating road map full of possibility, and we’ve seized upon those possibilities even more, exploring things even deeper.” As Season 8 ushers in the comic series’ much anticipated “All Out War” story arc following a thunderous Season 7 finale that revealed exactly who is the Grimes gang’s friend and foe, Gimple shares intel on what’s ahead.

Is The Entire Season “All Out War”?

Watching the first four episodes, [people] will be like, “See?!” But as we go into Episode 5, things shift and then start building up again – like taking a pot that’s boiling off of the burner and putting it aside for a minute, then putting it on the burner again after adding some ingredients that will make it that much richer.

A More Nuanced Negan

That’s a long-play story. Yes, we’re going to begin to see what made Negan into Negan. We’re gonna see things affect him in unusual ways. He is going to be a bit more of a nuanced character – but I will say, Lucille will still be in full effect. And he has some one-liners this season that are devastating.

Maggie As Leader

It’s a huge season for Maggie. [Even though she’s pregnant,]

I wouldn’t look at her as a moral compass in any way. After the events of Episode 701, she was the first to say, even in her trauma, “We gotta round everybody up and figure out how we’re gonna fight [The Saviors]” – with Rick being slow to roll on that. They all wound up in the same place by this season, but Maggie was there long before anyone else. She hates Negan. She hates the Saviors. And she’s also a force to contend with. Maggie is, as far as the conflict goes, one of the more hawk-like voices that we’ll hear. Can she fulfill the vengeance that she craves?

Rick And Michonne Making War, Not Love

The stakes are even higher for Michonne, in some ways. She pushed this whole thing forward. She was a big influence on Rick in getting back into this, and with that comes a sense of responsibility. And beyond that, being that much closer to Rick puts more weight on everything. If people thought that her warrior side was tempered by the relationship with Rick, that won’t be the case this season!

The Wildcards Eugene And Dwight

The number one thing with Eugene – above loyalty, friendship, honor, anything – is survival. He lied his way into survival with Abraham and Rosita. So, it’s not like a surprise. Negan offered him safety, and that’s just too seductive. With Dwight, it’s a different story. He wound up with Negan due to a very twisted emotional equation. ... He doesn’t seem to really care about his own survival – he just wants to see things set right. He just wants to see the Saviors done. And yet they’re both under the same roof. It’s gonna create a very unusual kind of conflict.

13 MOVIE SHOCKERS HORROR LOVERS MIGHT HAVE MISSED!

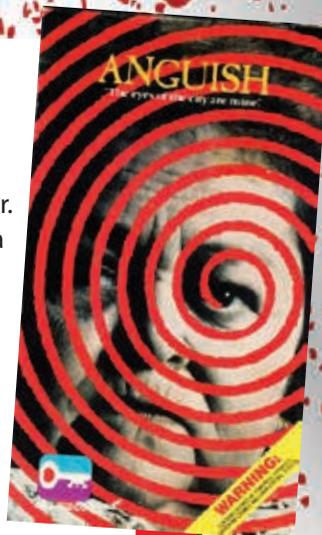

By Lori Acken

There are certain scary movies that everyone knows — even folks who hate scary movies. Films like, well, Scary Movie. And Carrie. The Exorcist. Rosemary's Baby. But true horror fans know there's nothing quite like finding a hidden gem or gory golden oldie — especially at Halloween time. We picked the braaaaaains of our savviest fear fanatics to offer you this list of don't-watch-alone creep shows with mind-blowing endings that might not yet be in your collection (flashlight to check for killers in the closet not included).

If you like Halloween nostalgia and other similar content, go to shop.remindmagazine.com to get the Oct. 2017 issue of ReMIND magazine.

Anguish (1987)

Nothing like a slasher flick about butchered movie patrons to shake up a theater. This one even opened with a disclaimer about subliminal messages, hypnosis and not talking to strangers during the film. Horror staple Zelda Rubenstein plays an overbearing mom whose control over her dweebish adult son spirals into mayhem at the cinema.

Sleepaway Camp (1983)

The '80s were big for teen angst movies, making teen slasher flicks a natural offshoot. And there's nothing like summer camp to bring on fears of ostracization and killers in the forest. In this jawdropper, teen cousins Angela and Ricky are off to camp together because Angela's been a little introverted since her dad and brother died in a boat crash. And she's keeping more than just her feelings a secret.

Videodrome (1983)

Because James Woods and Blondie's Deborah Harry — in a Canadian, "TV is killer" psychofest! In this only-for-the-adventurous film from The Fly's David Cronenberg, Woods plays a trash television peddler whose plot to bring a live Asian torture show to his airwaves launches himself and his psychologist girlfriend Nicki (Harry) into a multidimension nightmare.

Freaks (1932)

Made before Hollywood implemented the morality-enforcing Hays Code, the original cut was considered too shocking to air and was destroyed. Director/producer Tod Browning drew from his own traveling circus days — and cast real carnival workers — in this story of good-hearted societal outcasts who exact revenge on a beautiful trapeze artist for conning one of their own. Gooba gobble!

The Innocents (1961)

Tag-lined “You’ll Get the Shock of Your Life,” this Brit import — culled from Henry James’ The Turn of the Screw — concerns a first-time governess (Deborah Kerr) who discovers the hard way what happened to two former employees when the kids in her charge start acting awfully grown up. Though the film is a BAFTA nominee, the end scene rattled critics for multiple reasons. This film will be on TCM this month — see page 21 for dates and times.

Tourist Trapz (1979)

Rifeman Chuck Connors goes horror — what more do you need to know? How about some serious reaffirmation that mannequins are the worst? Connors plays Slausen, the lonely owner of a creepy roadside museum who plans to keep a group of frisky youngsters with car trouble as his company for a long, long time.

Carnival Of Souls (1962)

Made for just $33,000, this cult classic is a favorite of spookmeisters David Lynch and the late George A. Romero. So, what is driving Mary (Candice Hilligoss) mad — besides the endless organ music she hears and visions that may or may not be the result of a car crash she survived? Distinctly ‘60s vibey and shot in black and white, this one might sour you on organs for good.

The Changeling (1980)

This psychological creeper stars George C. Scott as composer John Russell, who moves to Seattle to recover from the accidental deaths of his wife and daughter. Discovering that his rental home is haunted, Russell investigates, and discovers a horrific tale of murder and deception involving a wealthy U.S. senator.

April Fool's Day (1986)

How can you lose with poshy-poshy characters named Muffy, Buffy, Skip, Chaz, Kit and Arch — plus spring break, an island mansion, a jack-in-the-box and a party store inventory’s worth of April Fools’ jokes that may or may not have murderous intent? Throw in an “Oh! OH!” ending and you have horror-meets-camp perfection.

Audrey Rose (1977)

The 1975 book on which the film is based scared the pants off of bold middle-schoolers and helped usher in the V.C. Andrews era of tormented-children thrillers. John Beck and Marsha Mason play the parents of 10-year-old Ivy (Susan Swift), who may be the reincarnated daughter of an insistent fellow (Anthony Hopkins) whose own girl died in a fiery crash.

The Funhouse (1981)

Seriously, would anyone think spending a night in a funhouse is ... fun? In Tobe Hooper’s post-Texas Chainsaw Massacre outing, a quartet of rebellious teens do just that, witnessing just how depraved (and frugal) the carnival workers truly are. Those meddling — and oh so endangered — kids! See page 18 for channels, dates and times.

In The Mouth Of Madness (1994)

Some books aren’t just bad, they’re evil. Though it’s not one of his best-known outings, horror master John Carpenter created this disaster flick that stars Sam Neill as an institutionalized insurance adjuster whose tale of woe and madness involves horror novelist Sutter Cane (Jürgen Prochnow), a mysterious — and missing — writer whose books are literally out of this world.

Burnt Offerings (1976)

Karen Black, Oliver Reed, Burgess Meredith and Bette Davis starred in this well-regarded ‘70s book adaptation about the Rolf family, whose vacation rental comes with an odd accessory — the homeowners’ mom, who lives in the attic and requires daily meals. It’s a little much for Mrs. Rolf, who learns it’s not just Mother Allardyce with an appetite. *This film airs on digital channel Comet this month.
